LIFE OF PAUL IS DISCUSSED

Dr. G. C. Cast Speaks at Bible Institute at Lutheran Church.

Paul's life, his character and his writings were presented by Dr. G. Cast of Capital university at the Marion Lutheran Sunday School Teachers' Institute last night at the Emanuel Lutheran church. Eighty-four men and women were present.

Dr. Gaal, who is conducting a series of four weekly discussions on the Epistles, traced Paula life from his boyhood and education to his second imprisonment in Rome and death.

"His life was almost exclusively the spiritual life," he said. "He had a spirit of adventure, influence over men, the sense of a mission to fulfill; he was stern and yet tender, and he had unshakable faith."

He spoke of Paula letters as giving a spiritual interpretation to the teaching and life of Jesus, and termed them "informal, personal and friendly utterances of the missionary and evangelist concerned about the special problems of individuals and of churches. The letters, according to Dr. Gaal, have a uniform plan of arrangements. In salutation, thanksgiving, general theme, practical section, personal messages to friends and closing words and benediction.

In a devotional talk on "He Is My Strength," one of a series on "What Does Jesus Mean to Me as a Teacher," Rev. J. W. Schillinger, pastor of the Emanuel church, said: "If you think that you have any strength of your own to succeed here, you are deluding yourself. Of yourself you can accomplish nothing. But if you are in Christ, with His almighty strength, you can do all things. I would urge all of you teachers then, to see to it that you at all times are living in Christ."

Sunday school teachers should never get in a rut by using the same teaching methods. Rev. William Frazing of Cardington told the group in his talk on "Type of Teaching" He mentioned the teaching methods of Jesus Christ, of Socrates who questioned, of Luther who taught through the catechism and of John Amos Comenius, a follower of Luther and a leader in modern education.

EVE'S ORCHARD

By MARGARET WIDDEMER

... herself as the feeling was one of space and quiet no of expense. She could almost see the moving shadows in about her the kindly people who were her own the generations of her people happy and high behind her in the old beautiful room. She was theirs now. She had come to be there and was doing what Rev. would have her do. She stood a while in the lower "friendly" alcove. Then she went upstairs to be and charge for the afternoon to be ready when Ellen came back.

She stood in her bedroom by the big maple bureau putting on the thin white silk stockings to fasten the white sandals slow as a snail. She dressed herself for one event. She stepped quietly down the broad shadowy aisle through the bars of muted sunlight and into the parlor she had made so beautiful again.

George and Ellen would go away. His work took him, she had learned all over the world. The Seacoast place would only be one of a dozen experiments a man for him not the house was gone. But Eve would go away, too. She would go somewhere since she could be married to the man he loved could she be as much at peace as she right so comforted as in this house where the sense of generations of her own people upheld her. They understood they cared they were her kin. Sitting in the bay window at her table alone in the late gold light the aura of them still held her and loved her.

She had courage to face the life be ore her and see that it might be full and pleasant some day. There were old links to pick up in the village interest, friendships here and beyond. Judge would grow up responsible and devout she would have Uncle Henry's taciturn faithfulness and protection. The real love of two people that she was sure of and a work that she dignified by doing successfully and well—now her people didn't have as much as that to be sure of.

For a few moments more she stood at the long front window watching the wind bend the chrysanthemums that bordered the drive. The sun outlined her bright hair like an aureole the wind blew her thin dress against her. She felt the warmth and the freshness of the wind.

Again there in the great beautiful old room came a sense of release, complete quiet and freedom. The hot cross currents of pain and love and desire and frustration were still. In that quiet moment all was very well.

Denny Older and Thinner. The front door crashed open and shut. It did not disturb his mood of freed peace. Judge bless his heart didn't walk soberly these days he ran and banged like any other carefree boy. She turned to smile at the child. But it was a man who stood in the doorway.

Denny. She had time to see as he came swiftly to her hands out that he looked somewhat older and this better groomed immaculate in his sharply pressed flannels and seige coat his fair hair brushed smooth. That would be a relief to Mitzie's life the life he lived now.

He said: "Eve I was scared to death you got hurt in the fire. I've come back. He caught her by the hand. "You look like a happy angel all white there in the sunlight." Eve darling I'm all over my mad are you?"

She saw the old crinkling confident smile half shutting the long jade green eyes and wondered because it meant nothing to her. Was this the only word she wondered at herself she could find for the man she had once dreaded seeing for fear she would love him too much and be too wounded? This gay, optimistic woman this easily made love scattered to everyone? All a trifle.

I'm not angry with you if you mean that I'm with you?" She smiled at him courteously dropping his hands.

"Mitzie?" he queried flinging himself down on the set beside her. "What on earth should she be? Because while she is very much changed she wouldn't like her husband coming alone to see another woman.

He stared at her. You're crazy darling. I'm not Mitzie's husband. I'm you. I'm in love with you.

I heard you were marrying Mitzie in a month from the time you both wrote Mitzie.

He flushed but he answered her.

Oh come darling Mitzie away and let more than her prayers.

We had a hot flirtation the usual and a parting forever except for cocktails tomorrow afternoon.

What did you expect me to do when you threw me?

Oh Denny why discuss it? It all seemed so very far away memories that she did not want to recall. Mitzie mailed Mitzie's letter with your postscript.

She faced him now, safe and steadier and able to go on with life in measurable content but her own speech brought back to her that dreadful time when everything had crashed. When she stood helpless with that terrifying helplessness which the loss of money and work gives a woman alone even more than it does a man hurt and shocked at the discovery that the friends she had believed in could be so selfish and irresponsible toward her as if she was an abandoned cat.

Denny on top of all this had failed her when love away after her to a Mitzie prefers Killian.

It swirled away. She was safe now. She had painfully achieved peace and safety. The memory made a long shiver go over her there in the fresh sunniness of the late September afternoon.

His sensitive face contracted.

My poor darling he cried coming close and trying to take her in his arms. You've had a dreadful time. I was an angry I didn't know what I was doing. You cared more for that kid and the household you set up than you did for me. And I behaved like a fool carrying on with Mitzie. Just tried to forget my Eve—but I couldn't—I couldn't!

He said: "Eve I was scared to death you got hurt in the fire. I've come back."

He caught her by the hand.

"You look like a happy angel all white there in the sunlight." Eve darling I'm all over my mad are you?"

The Chief Orders Boat Searched for Missing Trio

I THINK of the FBI as a crew who stood by to what the gang was up to on the captured boat. I mean when he said he had a hunch he just had a hunch he had a hunch and when he had a hunch he had a hunch which means I don't know.

With a man of despair he slumped forward and would have fallen to the deck if I had not held him by the strong arm of the one who he had just passed aside with a mere look of indifference. No, I caught him just in time to prevent his fall and with an arm around his shoulder held his father steady until the elder man recovered breath and speech.

On my God he was mad with his returning here. Every thing is as they are.

They will be if you write any more of my time in babbling my father's name—brown—he gave his order without turning his head—take a list of men go below and see if every book and cranny of the boat. Shoot down anybody who resists you.

The Stars Say

For Wednesday, April 14

A DAY of perplexity and indecision is indicated by the conundrums of major international directions. While there may be lively and enterprising enough events may these and propositions be of interest for very wise decision and shrewd business judgment. There may involve some of plans or possible gains. However, calm judgment and a competitive conduct, forces and violence, with a minimum of the emotions, is the secret to success.

Today's Birthday it is prepared for a lively and exciting year, calling for their shrewd and enterprising talents. A day on this day may be strenuous, determined and bold, pushing over constructive lines toward taking care of itself to its detriment. It should be trained in self-discipline, in controls and impulses.
